Volunteer Statement

1. Volunteering with Us

As WholeMind Resilience grows, volunteers will play a key role in expanding our local impact. Whether you can offer an hour, a single piece of work, or regular support, your time helps us reach more people, more often.

We welcome volunteers across a range of roles — this could include administrative or technical support, helping at events, supporting, co-delivering or delivering sessions, joining our advisory board, supporting our leaders, or helping with bid writing or fundraising. Every role is different, so we'll talk with you about what fits your skills, time, and interests.

We reimburse reasonable, agreed expenses, and every volunteer is supported with a proper induction and a named point of contact. Where a role involves working directly with the people we support, appropriate checks (including DBS checks where relevant) are part of getting started — this keeps everyone safe, including you.

WholeMind Resilience takes a skill enhancement approach to volunteers — looking for opportunities to develop volunteer skills and experience in a way that supports their own personal or career development.
